Imagine for a moment you are building a house and you demand the builders of the house live in it whilst they build it..

I get wet! This house sucks!

Where are the walls! This house sucks!

This is never going to be a house! Lets quit!

I always imagined my house would have paint, this one doesn't! What are
The architects even doing!

Now Replace the Builders with Developers and the house with a game in production..

As developers, we live in the games we develop and there are those who can see the vision of what the game will become and those who will not be able to grasp that vision.

If you listen to every negative and rather obvious thing that gets said about your game you can become negative too.

You need to reassure everyone the walls are coming, the roof is coming, everything is in schedule to be built! Calm down! You won't be wet forever!

Except the pool..we can no longer afford the pool and replaced it with a bath tub

Negativity Is a Virus That Spreads vision holders are a Vaccine

Weed out negativity and remove it from your team. Don't let people spread the virus

Don't let people present problems without a solution!

Don't let people state glaringly obvious negative facts about the game and use it to push a negative agenda!

Do not let people bash other people or the game you are making!

Don't listen to those people who just don't seem to change and never have constructive feedback..

A Picture Tells 1000 words

Saturate the office in screen grabs from the best of the best maps/gameplay from the genre you are making

The walls should be covered in concept for features and system designs

Get everyone knowing the answers to the questions that you do by supplying them the information.

Do not listen to negative people unless they present in a constructive manner – and bolster those around you who are positive with information to empower them.

Get everyone to believe in your game and eventually the negative virus is weeded from your team and everyone will stop listening to negative people who won't change because they know what they are making.
